Evidence for Education in Emergencies

We are currently living and working in a new paradigm due to the COVID-19 pandemic. With some 177 countries now experiencing forced school closure and around 72% of students - some 1.3 billion in total - globally estimated to be out of school (as of May 2020), COVID-19 is having an unprecedented impact on education systems around the world and is exacerbating existing challenges related to education and learning. This pandemic has highlighted the need for quality evidence to support emergency preparedness and response across education systems globally.

The 2020 call for E-Cubed proposals aims to generate and disseminate relevant and usable research to support evidence for education during crises and large-scale disruptions. We call on applicants to share proposals that address the gaps in evidence for education that have been further highlighted as a result of this global emergency. We ask you to consider preventative solutions as well as immediate responses to addressing education needs during large-scale disruptions

Deadline for submission July 6th, 2020
